PASTOR'S CORNER

The Dedication of St. John Lateran

*He builds a house with his hands
Thirty years go by it stands
It stands where nothing stood
A house of stone
The mason sleeps real good*

If you have never seen the movie, My Left Foot, do yourself a big favor rent it or download it. It tells the real life true story of Christy Brown an Irish writer and painter. But Christy Brown was so much more than that. Christy was born with cerebral palsy and, as a result, was almost entirely spastic in his limbs. I say "almost" because Christy had control of one part, and one part only, of his body, the toes on his left foot. The movie, as you might guess, is rather uplifting and inspiring, although there are dark moments, very dark moments, a darkness which may have been a more realistic reflection of Christy's true story. But there is one scene that moved me deeply when I first saw it.

Christy, because of his condition, was thought to be mentally handicapped and impaired. The doctors encouraged his parents to simply put him away in a home, since personal care for him would be grueling and draining and there wouldn't be much to show for it. But Christy's mother, like every Irish mother I know, was a force of nature, and was unwavering in her commitment to raise him in a loving, family environment. But no one expected much.

One day, Christy is on the floor and with his left foot he picks up a piece of chalk between his toes and begins to try to scratch something on the wood floor. At first, it just looks like mindless, pointless scrapes. But what begins as a raw, simple thing continues as a monumental, exhausting task. Poor Christy is grunting and sweating and writhing, practically in tears as he desperately attempts to communicate. It is then that his mother, simply and plainly, encourages her son, thought to be unintelligent, thought to be unreachable, thought to be unteachable, with a straightforward, clear cut command in a beautiful Celtic brogue: MAKE YOUR MARK, Christy. The scene is both excruciating and stirring. At the end of this epic struggle, the camera pulls back and we see Christy flat on the floor, drained and exhausted, with a single, rough, crude word encircling his twisted body: M-O-T-H-E-R. Mother.

The scene is powerful, because the struggle of Christy Brown is the struggle of all of us, all of humankind, all of creation even. We deeply yearn to "make our mark." We crave to express the longings of our heart, to let existence know that we were here and we have made a difference. We seek to articulate our dreams, to scratch out a crude word to express our appreciation, our love, our devotion, sometimes our frustrations, especially to those who believe that there is something more in us than what others expect. Our marks can be bold, can be delicate, can be unsophisticated, can be profound. We want to build something great.

But the process is hard, the struggle is arduous, it is simply a lot of work. Some frustrated by the level of exertion it takes, simply give up. Some because it can be so incredibly difficult settle for superficiality, trifles, small-mindedness. If you have ever felt that way in your life, or if you ever get to that moment, I want you to think of young Christy Brown's left foot and the beauty that surged from it.

This week we celebrate the dedication of the Lateran Basilica in Rome, the Pope's church, the oldest basilica, and the only one of the four major Basilicas I haven't been in. (The other three are: St. Peter's, St. Mary Major and St. Paul's Outside the Walls) We remember that long ago as the church struggled for acceptance, struggled to make its mark, the mark of Christ, men and women of faith built something great, something of value, something that lasted the centuries.

The word "dedication" comes from a word meaning "proclaim." Back in the fourth century, Christians proclaimed their faith, made their mark and put aside a place where they scratched out a simple word: GRACE. When I think of dedication, I think of those individuals in my life who, like Christy's mother in his life, saw something more in me than others did, more than the world did, more than I did. My parents, siblings, teachers, friends, fellow faculty and staff, even students encouraged me to make my mark in the world and that has made all the difference.

Ten years ago, I had the privilege of being in the musical Working. One of the songs, is called The Mason, and it is about a stone worker and how he simply and methodically builds things. It is about how he makes his mark in the world. The song ends:

*He builds a house
With his hands
A hundred years go by
It stands
It tells you who he was
A life goes fast
But the work a mason does
It's made to last
The work a mason does is made to last.*

I would like for all of you to think about how you are going to make your mark. How are you going to build the temple that is your life? Are you willing to do the hard, hard work to scratch out and write something beautiful, as Mother Teresa once said, something beautiful for God? Don't give in to frustration, don't give in to the cynics, don't give in to the easy way.

Build something that lasts.

Make your mark.

Father Kevin

Join a Small Church Community!

You are invited to continue creating small church communities (SCCs) at Holy Redeemer within our larger community. We began forming SCCs in January 2015 and several groups are still active. This invitation is open to every parishioner, no matter your age or current involvement in the parish.

Through reading and reflecting on Sunday scriptures, Small church communities help ordinary people connect life and faith. SCCs are groups of 8-12 parishioners who meet weekly. The groups develop a sense of community among the participants as we learn about each other and our life journeys.

Groups will be organized based on dates and times convenient to the participants. The meetings will last for about an hour and a half and be held in parishioners' homes. Please consider this opportunity to deepen your faith by participating in a SCC. No experience or preparation necessary – just come as you are!
